ABSTRACT

This research aims to determine and analyze interpersonal communication in creating a harmonious family. Study of Early Marriage Couples in Terawang Jaya Sub-District, Muko Muko Regency. This research is qualitative research using the theory of Interpersonal Communication Alo Liliweri, (2015:29); openness, empathy, support (supportiveness), positive feeling (positiveness), and equality. The results of this research show the way they openly convey family problems. A sense of empathy, husband and wife couples have high empathy for husband and wife, which can be seen from the way they understand problems in the family, as well as some couples from early marriages in Terawang Jaya Sub-District who provide support to husband and wife regarding the problems they are experiencing. Support, husband and wife provide support to each other in communicating, seen from the couple as communicants receiving information and providing suggestions that support information from the wife. Positive feelings, positive feelings in interpersonal communication between young couples are still not well established. However, this couple tries to convey information clearly and accommodate suggestions and criticism from their partner in a positive way. Equality, husband and wife as the communicators respect all opinions of both regardless of the problems faced, so that there is an equality in communicating without prioritizing personal ego.
